

The Cohort

$9,400 A YEAR

You pick the group. Paras, new teachers, whoever is carrying the most. Ten people work together across a school year with four virtual sessions, full hub and blog access, and direct access to our team. Fifteen maximum, from one building or across the district.

THE YEAR

- SEPTEMBER 18
What your role actually is, and what it isn't
 First session. Walked through the role clarity tool together.
- NOVEMBER 13
The teacher and para partnership conversation
 Open questions, mostly about how to start it.
- JANUARY 22
The hardest ten minutes of your day
 Two hub tools the group picked themselves.
- APRIL 9
What you want next year to look like
 Planning what they want to ask for.

IN BETWEEN

- Full hub access and the paid blog, all year, for every member
- Optional office hours, second Thursday of the month, 30 minutes
- A named person on our team they can email directly

WHAT THEY BROUGHT TO OFFICE HOURS

My teacher and I have never talked about what I'm supposed to do.

I get handed the hardest kid and no plan.

Nobody told me I could ask for the lesson ahead of time.

I've been here nine years and never had training.

Themes roll up to your dashboard. Names never do.

WHAT YOU SEE

Cohort of 10 · measured before the first session, and again in March

Feeling of support 3.8 → 7.1

Stress 7.9 → 5.4

Intent to return 4.2 → 7.6

Plum bar is March. Gold line is where they started in September.

WHAT LEADERSHIP TAKES TO THE BOARD

Ten paras started the year at 4.2 out of 10 on intent to return. By March they were at 7.6. Nine of the ten are coming back next year. The district spent $9,400.

HOW IT IS MEASURED

- Retention within the cohort
- Stress and feeling of support, at baseline and again in March
- Hub implementation rate for the group
- Session attendance across the year

Objectives

I can give a specific group real support instead of hoping they figure it out

I can see whether that group moved from where they started

I can tell whether the people I invested in actually stayed

I can point to a number when someone asks whether it worked

How it runs

You choose who is in it and we build the year around that group. A cohort of paras and a cohort of first-year teachers do not need the same four meetings, so they do not get them.

How the cohort is set

- The school or district chooses who is in it
- Ten members standard, fifteen maximum, from one building or across a district
- Retention, stress and feeling of support measured before the first session, so there is a baseline to compare against

Sessions are shaped by the group

- Four virtual sessions across the year, conversational, no fixed agenda
- Working through a tool together, open questions, or whatever the group needs that month
- The group picks at least one session's content themselves

What every member gets

- Full hub access and paid blog access, all year
- Optional monthly office hours
- A named team member they can email between sessions

The only offering with live time for staff

The Focus includes two sessions a year with your leadership team. The Cohort is the one where our team sits with the staff themselves, which is why cohort size sets how many can run at once.

Groups schools have chosen

- Paraprofessionals, often the largest group with the least training
- First and second year teachers, where most exits happen
- A single grade band carrying a hard year
- Staff in a role with nobody else in the building doing it

Nothing to set up

- One onboarding form and a list of names
- Baseline is collected by us, before the first session
- Everything reports to your dashboard automatically
- Contracts run January to December or August to July

WHERE THE OTHER OFFERINGS FIT

The Pulse · $2,500

The weekly staff read, on its own. Five dimensions trended across the year, plus a monthly report telling you what to do about it.

The Focus · $5,200

A tool every three weeks for the area you already named, thirteen across the year, plus two sessions with your leadership team.

The Blueprint · $25–60K

All of it working as one system, across three phases. Each offering stands alone. None of them is a step toward another.
